EXPERIMENTAL FARM
CHANGE COMPLETED

The University of Arizona is coming through with its promise to use the 80 acres purchased for experimental purposes for its experiments in horticulture, livestock and field crops. It will be remembered that when the land was purchased Mesa donated several thousand dollars of the purchase money. The farm is beautifully situated one mile west of town along the south side of the Mesa-Tempe highway. In accordance with the promise made at the time of the purchase, the university has arranged for the removal of everything movable connected with the farm formerly out from Phoenix, to the present location and will begin active experimental work in the various departments. The property near Phoenix will be discontinued for experimental purposes, but has been sub-leased and will be put to active use for ranching purposes.

WILL LOCATE HERE

J. R. Foster, of Roscoe, Texas, with his family has arrived in Mesa and will locate on some of the farm lands adjacent. He is a relative of D. R. Guthrie and is stopping for the present at the Guthrie home. Mr. Foster formerly was in the grocery business but considers that the town is well supplied in that line and will go in for dairy farming.

He is another of the people from other states who have written the various commercial clubs in the valley and have been attracted to this section by the opportunities set forth in the valley literature. The Mesa Commercial Club has on file a letter from him asking for information as to the town and country.

PASTIMES BEATEN
BY LIBRARY TEAM

The Pastimes who qualified as "Jack the Giant Killer," when they humbled the Outlaws last week, were forced yesterday afternoon to in turn taste the bitter dust of defeat. The Librarians, a new light shining on the baseball horizon, twisted the trump.

Perhaps the Pastimes were a little too confident. Last week's victory had given the team a small sized dose of swelled dome. Of course they were not invincible and all of that, but yet there were few teams in Phoenix who could make them retreat from the trenches. It was a case yesterday of who was the most prepared. It happened that the Librarians were in the first position.

The game, funny as it may seem, was won by the same score as the Outlaw-Red contest, that is 10 to 8. The box score is below:

Pastimes	AB	R	H	PO	A	E

Wool Jersey is a Satisfactory Fabric
By May Manton

TRULY this is a phenomenal summer. The fourth of July has come and gone and we have known only a day or two of real summer heat. As a result, many of the fashions which in themselves are more or less out of place have not seemed as grotesquely out of place as was feared. As a matter of course, when fashionable women decided that the fur scarfs were comfortable and satisfactory ones to wear in the motor or on the mountain tops or wherever it was really cool, the foolish little stay-at-homes, who fancy they enter the list of the fashionable set when they wear garments of a similar sort no matter how much out of place or out of season, were sure to don them at high noon to parade the avenue and upon various similar unsuitable occasions. We have seen many strange sights in old Gotham and undoubtedly we shall continue to see them, but happily we always can escape to the nearby resorts and refresh ourselves with the really well dressed. There have been so many actually cool days when the races were in progress and other important events being enjoyed, that the fur scarfs and fur wraps have been reported with truth, but it does not hold that they ever can be or will be satisfactory, rational or really smart worn under the hot sun or in the crowded city. After all Dame Fashion is not such an irrational being. She establishes certain regulations and she sets the example of certain costumes for certain occasions. It is not her fault that they are copied far and wide. It is never necessary to inform women of social place that suitability is the true test of smart dressing, but one wishes sometimes that the maxim might be printed as a tract and circulated broadcast, so many times it is overlooked and forgotten.

The coolness of the summer has perhaps intensified the love of sports and to some extent, it may be responsible for the very great favor that is shown the wool jersey costumes for they are worn by the best dressed sports women and unquestionably they have a far greater elegance and suitability than the silk. From Paris, comes the word that the material will be used for costumes of general wear throughout the Autumn, it takes such beautiful folds, it is dyed to such lovely colors and we well may hope to see the report verified. We have worn serge until we are a bit weary, however beautiful it may be and the wool jersey will be a welcome novelty, and it certainly can be made into most attractive costumes.

With the coming of the cooler weather we shall see a great many separate blouses that are finished over the skirts. A Parisian fancy is for making them of the plain colored silk jersey with embroidery of silk or of beads. They are pretty and they are dainty, how far they will prove practical remains to be seen.

At the moment there is a great deal of interest in traveling and motor costumes and one of the new materials which really is a revival, is our old friend alpaca. It is made into exceedingly smart tailored suits and it is as lustrous and as handsome as it was when it was in vogue years ago. It makes most satisfactory costumes for traveling, for motorizing and the like for it sheds dust and it is light of weight. A very smart one, that is typical of the way the material is handled by the best designers is made with a perfectly plain flaring skirt and with a fitted coat that flares moderately over the hips. This coat is held by three buttons and buttonholes at the waist line and is finished with a collar that can be rolled open or turned up about the throat. The stitching on the coat makes its only trimming. A suit of wool jersey is in dark, but not navy blue, with a jacket in Russian style finished with a high military collar and both the collar and belt are finished with embroidery in beige color. A second costume is again in Russian blouse style but with an open neck and has pretty embroidery of the same shade on the collar and pockets. If the late summer establishes the vogue for wool jersey and for alpaca we will have at least two serviceable and satisfactory materials for between seasons wear.

The newest separate blouses are interesting for many reasons. A pretty one is made of pink taffeta embroidered in gold and silver. It is of course designed for a dressy costume, but it is extended to form its own peplum and is finished with a half low round neck and circular collar. The belt is really a narrow bit of ribbon with a bow and the sleeves are finished with ribbon bands and bows above the flaring cuffs. Designers have been forced to realize that women will not give up the separate blouse. Simple frocks are very charming; they have their place and we all like them, but the blouse is a satisfactory garment, it deserves a permanent place and a permanent place is demanded for it. From the house of Paquin are coming some pretty ones made of a very pale colored linen with groups of little tucks as finish, and full plaits of the material at the neck and wrists that are held in place by bands of black velvet ribbon. As a matter of course, the ribbon is of the soft pliable handkerchief sort. White blouses of tulle and of net and of the two materials combined are worn and are very charming. A very pretty one combines the tulle with crepe and is trimmed with white soutache. There is a blouse for every occasion, for every hour of the day it would seem, and embroidery appears upon almost every one. As has been stated in previous letters, the shortage of trimming continues. All kinds of needlework are in vogue, and braid trimmings are being extensively used and will be. There is some embroidery finish to be found upon the blouses of morning wear as well as upon those of afternoon occasions. A tulle blouse is, for example, of white pongee with a sailor collar and cuffs embroidered with tennis rackets in bright red. A very handsome afternoon blouse of pink chiffon is finished with a scanty peplum that is scalloped at its lower edge and bound with silk. The taffeta blouse referred to is embroidered with gold and silver and the story of embroidery of various sorts and of various uses might be continued indefinitely.

The various Oriental silks that are variations of pongee are much liked. They are utilized both for morning costumes and for the afternoon ones. A smart gown is of the heavy tussah silk in khaki color made with a circular skirt that is gathered at the back and is trimmed with row upon row of soutache braid with a row of big buttons covered with the material above. There is a dainty blouse of white linen and a fichu of tussah with long scarf ends that are richly embroidered with beads and finished with long bead tassels. It seems impossible to escape from the embroidery idea. Whether it is carried out in coarse wool, in heavy silk or in beads.

Among the latest accessories that are reported from abroad are neck scarfs of ribbon, the ends embroidered with beads and finished with bead fringe. Black taffeta ribbon is embroidered with steel beads and with colored beads and there are various ways in which the idea is utilized. So many women like to make pretty trifles of the sort during the summer to use as holiday souvenirs, that the suggestion may be worth considering at this time. Little conventionalized flowers embroidered with beads that have been referred to in previous letters can be turned to excellent account in the making of these trifles and of various other pretty little accessories. Ribbon of any color that will serve as a background with a single flower embroidered on each end and with a fringe of the beads would make a most effective tie. A girdle of a little wider ribbon to match would make a good effect and narrow girdles are being so extensively used that the idea is essentially a practical one, and the work is very simple. All sorts of good transfers can be purchased and by transferring to thin tissue in place of the material and working through the tissue onto the ribbon, then tearing the paper away, a perfect effect can be obtained. There are no transfer lines on the material to be seen between the beads and the work is quite as easy to do through the tissue as without it. Not alone is embroidery and work of various sorts exceedingly fashionable, simple crochet is being put to a great many new and interesting uses. A very handsome wrist bag is of heavy silk in a sort of castor shade that makes a good background while the lower part is of Roman stripes crocheted in silk, the stitches used being those that are familiar in the making of neckties.

9070 (With Basting Line and Added Seam Allowance) Dress for Misses and Small Women, 16 and 18 years.

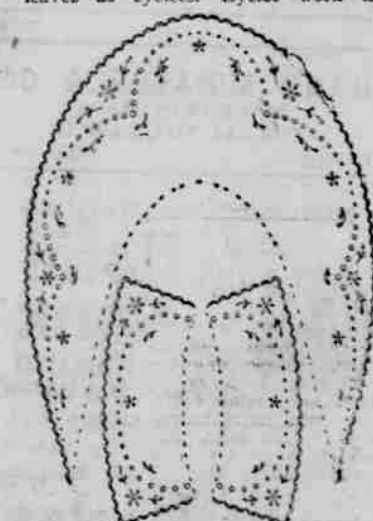

Advance Fashions for Misses

THESE two frocks represent a wide difference in style yet both are eminently smart. The fichu and the ruffled peplum are much used upon lingerie dresses and they are exceedingly attractive and summer-like. The long waisted plain bodice makes one of the newest features for formal costumes and this one, with the circular tunic over the straight skirt of lace, may be accepted as an advance style, for costumes of just such sort are promised in numbers with the coming of Autumn.

Collars and Cuffs

EMBROIDERED collar and cuffs will transform any child's gown into a dainty one. The design shown here is simple, and it does not mean any great amount of labor, yet it is exceedingly attractive. It can be worked in white or in color or it can be worked in white with touches of color. The work can be done either solidly or as eyelets or in a combination of the two. A very charming effect could be obtained by working the scallops, the flowers and the leaves in solid embroidery and the dots as eyelets, or working the dots and scallops solidly and the flowers and leaves as eyelets. Eyelet work is much liked and combined with the solid work it is exceedingly attractive. The design is a good one for linen and also for the thin batistes, handkerchief lawns and fabrics of such sort. It does not mean any great amount of labor and it is exceedingly handsome. Just now there is a fancy for using colored accessories. Pink or blue linen worked with white would be very smart. The collar is especially desirable for a child's coat and it can be used over pique or over corduroy, over broadcloth or over silk, for embroidered accessories are pretty on all materials. The transfer patterns are easy to handle. They require only a hot iron to print the design on the fabric with assured success. The ink of this special one is of a clinging quality, so that the first touch of the iron secures it to position and prevents any danger of slipping. In place of cutting the scallops on the edges, a great many workers like to cut them a little beyond and to turn the extra material up on the under side, hemming it firmly into place to make a strong finish. Since children's collars require frequent laundering, that treatment is a desirable one.

If the collar is made of batiste or of handkerchief lawn or such material and a very dainty effect is wanted, its edge and the edges of the cuffs could be finished with frills of very narrow lace. Valenciennes is the one usually preferred for such purpose, but any simple childlike lace can be used. Micheline is pretty and launders well and that the lace should be of the washable sort is the first and all important consideration.
